Prognostic significance of distant metastasis in stage II colorectal cancer. To evaluate the clinical significance of isolated metastasis in the regional lymph nodes after curative surgery in patients with stage II colorectal cancer. A total of 141 consecutive patients with stage II colorectal cancer who underwent curative surgery were reviewed. They were followed for survival. The prognosis of these patients depended on the presence of distant metastasis at the time of diagnosis. Of the 141 patients, 57 (40.1%) had isolated metastases in the regional lymph nodes only and were not treated with postoperative adjuvant therapy. The 5-year disease-free survival rate for all patients with isolated lymph node metastasis was 37.0%. For the 57 patients with isolated metastases in the regional nodes, the 5-year disease-free survival rate was significantly better (55.3%) than that for the 84 patients with metastasis in the regional nodes ($P=0.015$). The extent of lymph node involvement, grade of differentiation, and the presence of vascular invasion were not significantly associated with survival. For patients with stage II colorectal cancer, isolated metastasis in the regional lymph nodes after surgical resection is an independent risk factor for recurrence. Adjuvant therapy (chemotherapy or radiotherapy) can be considered for these patients to improve the survival rate.
