To establish normal values for quantitative T(2) relaxation times (T(2)s) of cerebral white matter (WM) in healthy dogs. Eight dogs. Dogs were imaged with T(2) maps, and the magnetization transfer ratio (MTR) values were measured in several anatomic regions of the brain. Whole brain values were used to establish reference range values. In addition, for each dog, a T(2) reference range map was generated by using the last image from the T(2) map as a template and placing all other images within a predefined distance of the template image. Values for each pixel in each T(2) reference range map were represented as a percentage of the brain image value at that same pixel. From study 1, T(2) value ranges were calculated for the caudal portion of the internal capsule (47.0 to 74.1 ms), middle cerebellar peduncle (36.8 to 57.4 ms), and centrum semiovale (74.0 to 104.4 ms). For the temporal portion of the internal capsule, T(2) value ranges were 47.6 to 64.0 ms. For the occipital lobe
