1. Use the Enhance command to lighten the image. You don't have to use a filter to brighten an image, but you can play around with the size and strength of the filter. Just make sure that you choose Filter⇒Filter⇒Enhance⇒Lighten, or press Alt+E. The brightness is controlled using a slider, which ranges from 0 to 100 percent. 2. Save the image. Photoshop saves a JPEG or Photoshop saved image (PSD), or you can save your image for the web (Web) format. 3. Open a new image and duplicate the Smart Object (use the Shortcut keystroke Ctrl+J, or choose Edit⇒Duplicate), and then scale the Smart Object to fit the new image size (refer to Figure 9-2-2). The Smart Object is an editable, nondestructive object that stores a color space, levels, and other options. It's used to create and maintain layers. When you duplicate the Smart Object, it creates a copy of the original layers, which you can then edit and use. Use the Align and Reposition dialog box options to align the Smart Object with the exact position of the image layer. 4. Use the Brush tool (W) to apply the new brightness. If necessary, flatten the layer so that the Smart Object is the active layer and paint on the brightness using a black-to-white brush, where the opacity of the brush is 100 percent. When the brightness is 100 percent, the image should be brighter than the original. When it's less than 100 percent, the image should be darker than the original. You can change the color of the brush by using the color box in the Options bar to change the color of the brush and then manually paint over the brightness. 5. Add some text to the logo. Photoshop has a handy text feature that enables you to add, edit, and move text and text lines. The text feature is located on the Expert panel of the Layers panel. When you have added some text, you can use the Select tool (space bar) to select the text and then press the space bar again to activate the Move Tool (V). Drag the image to where you want the text

I will explain what features Photoshop Elements has and also how to use them. I will also show you several examples of Photoshop Elements working together with other programs. Photoshop Elements vs Photoshop Photoshop is the most professional, stable and famous graphic editor. Even if it is very powerful and features the most sophisticated tools, it is also more complicated than Photoshop Elements. Photoshop often seems more complicated than it actually is. You can choose among three editions of Photoshop: Photoshop Creative Cloud, Photoshop Extended and Photoshop Elements. Photoshop Elements is the most affordable edition of Photoshop, but it lacks many features of both Photoshop and Photoshop Creative Cloud. Photoshop Extended has advanced features like 3D animation and the 3D paint tool. But it is a much more complex program than Photoshop Elements. Photoshop Creative Cloud is the most paid and time-consuming edition of Photoshop. Photoshop Elements is very powerful and versatile, and it is also very easy to use because it has a very simple, no-nonsense user interface. If you do not know how to use Photoshop, Photoshop Elements is actually the better and cheaper alternative. The best you can do is either to try it yourself, or see an online tutorial. Why use Photoshop Elements? You can use Photoshop Elements to edit still or moving images like photos, videos, and small web graphics. You can use Photoshop Elements to do something simple like remove unwanted objects from the image. You can also use Photoshop Elements to make a collage of many different images. If you want to do something more complex like retouching images, make a basic 3D model or design logos, you should use Photoshop Elements. You can use Photoshop Elements to edit several different files in one session. You can even open several folders of images at one time. You can use Photoshop Elements to work with a file-based workflow. You can even open several Photoshop files at the same time with Photoshop Elements. out, Dave. If he wants to pay for three, that's fine." "You're doing fine, Joanie. That was our agreement." "Whatever. Just let me know when he's done." Dave called to Jake, who'd knocked over a gallon of ice cream and was doing his best to eat it with a spoon. "Jake, I'm leaving now. I'll be outside." Jake didn't say anything, just took another bite of ice cream and concentrated on his work. Dave got up and brushed his teeth. He filled a glass with cold water from the tap, took a deep, cleansing breath, and drank. It wasn't an issue that time but he wanted to watch Jake carefully. "I'd like you to turn up the pressure on that pump, Dave, so that we can get out of this city and get the hell out of the USA," Hal said. "I'll see what I can do." "You'd better hurry, dickhead. I want to be in Canada before the FBI, or whoever, can get here." Dave went to the front door and opened it. "All right. That's good." Jake came out of the back room, stood at the door, and watched Dave take one last, deep breath, then he saw him emerge from the basement. "What's that?" "It's the pump, Jake. They're going to bleed the water out." "How fast?" "I don't know. It's up to them." He turned to the door and looked at Dave. "Have you seen the car?" "It's in the parking lot with the rest of them." "Hurry, they're coming." There were thirty people in the area, and their vehicles made it impossible to move. Dave had the idea of going directly to the rental car and trying to get away. But the look on Jake's face told him that would never work. He started a search of the lot, and most of the other drivers in the area kept looking over the roofs of their cars, and he had to smile. "Jake, come see if he's here." "I'm looking." "Can you find him?" "I don't know. They're old cars." Dave had the uneasy feeling that this was a bad idea
