currently, only sap businessobjects bi applications are supported in a 64bit version of sap gui for windows. if you have trouble with the 32bit versions of such applications you can switch to the 64bit version with sap gui for windows setup. apropos, we also had some minor issues with the 64bit version of sap businessobjects bi applications, but they should be fixed in the latest release. for more information please check the sap note on . in our project, we have not done a lot, we have not installed any third party apps. we have not done anything with the microsoft o365, and this new 64bit o365 is still extremely fast. i am not completely sure if i can compare it with the old 32bit version. i am also curious about the configuration on this new version of o365. therefore, i will compare the config on the new 64bit o365 with the old 32bit version, and i am amazed by the difference in the config. i can only guess that someone has configured it for 64bit and the 32bit version of o365 on a single machine. my guess is that the old 32bit version was configured by someone who had a 32bit version of windows and a 32bit version of o365 installed on it, while the new 64bit o365 is probably configured by someone who had a 64bit version of windows and a 64bit version of o365 installed on it. the main reason that there is a 64bit version of sap gui for windows is to allow for the 64bit processing of the automation controls. the 64bit version of sap gui for windows offers the following automation controls:
