The discovery that the kinesin-like kinesin-14 is required to accomplish cytokinesis in C. elegans has provided a mechanistic link between cell-cycle control and organelle positioning. Cytokinesis in C. elegans involves an ordered series of cellular events that require an orchestrated program of events; the actin cytoskeleton must be in the proper configuration before the uniting membranes are broken. In this essay, I describe how TAK-1, the protein that links the C. elegans kinesin-14, the myosin-1, and the microtubules, works to coordinate these events and ultimately drives the progression through cytokinesis.

Cluster of orthurea in the southern US (Case Report): A potential health threat? A cluster of orthurea (CO) cases was identified among residents of a rural area in the southern US. The primary objective was to describe the epidemic pattern of CO cases in the year 2000. Personal interviews were performed with members of the cluster, in order to gather information on the epidemiological pattern, exposures, and clinical outcomes. All cases were confirmed by laboratory testing and/or clinical diagnosis. CO cases were found among six persons in this cluster (possible and probable = four cases each). There was no pattern to the diagnoses of CO cases. All cases occurred within a family, and all had high CO levels at the time of the interview. There is a potential for an increase in CO cases with the coming winter and with future increases in temperature; however, the number of cases found in this cluster was low.

Cops Seem To Lose Faith In Informant Who Helped Put Drug Dealer In Jail Get a compelling long read and must-have lifestyle tips in your inbox every Sunday morning — great with coffee! The cops who busted a prominent Northeast Philly drug dealer last week say they always knew that the tipster was lying. So why was they shocked when he admitted on the stand yesterday that he didn't really know
