I'm a french New York native (Farmingdale, Long Island) and I'm 28 years old. I'm a player and an enthusiast for the games of Zengoku Wars and Tiger Fighter 1931. I've been playing Zengoku Wars since 2014 and Tiger Fighter 1931 since 2015. I'm currently playing the version MP020 on the Maxis website. I don't have a vast amount of experience in the management game genre, but my experience of playing Zengoku Wars has allowed me to read and learn what a competition game should be, and how to succeed at one. If you want to know more about me, feel free to read my About page. I'm always glad to chat with you in the comments or the game's official forum. Thanks for stopping by and I hope that the information you find is useful! What's new:

: Crushing to victory and coming up short. “But I’ve got Todd out here. He’s a natural.” Travis Birdwell knew he had what it took to be the Travis Birdwell of the fighting world. He’d already proven that in his UFC debut, taking a brutal TKO at the 2:43 mark of the opening round against Justin Gaethje, stunning from the very opening bell. (None of us saw that one coming!) Birdwell kept up the pace — which, as you can probably tell, is a big part of his fighting game plan, with its emphasis on head movement and dancing on the edges, rather than driving on a straight line — and finished the action with an arm triangle and three subsequent punches. He wasn’t done, though. Before wrapping up the engagement with a perfunctory nod to Gaethje’s hands, which seemed to indicate that the start of their fight had had some positive moments for the young fighter, Birdwell reached under the center of the DC-thrusting man’s chest and pummeled his face-down body with hard punches until he was forced to tap. Despite that unanimous, stoppage-emphasized win — which saw the first of the 28 submissions Birdwell has dropped during his 28 professional wins in eight seasons — a top-10 ranked contender in the UFC blue and gold, the 24-year-old country boxer is in a sport in which you don’t get to make a third submission attempt, meaning that Birdwell would have to chance UFC boss Dana White letting him outsmart a fearsome champion like Demian Maia in a bout that also features Conor McGregor’s brother. The obstacles in front of the newest “Tav Birdwell,” however, seem to be more favorable than the pitfalls he found himself in when he was forced to make a third submission attempt against UFC middleweight champion Michael Bisping in March 2015. It’s a situation that seems eerily familiar. Almost in trademark fashion, Birdwell was able to squeeze out a third submission finish against Bisping, this time a triangle. Though the fight was never really competitive, the one-sided nature of the bout offered some positives. Birdwell became the first UFC fighter to last the distance with Bisping — after going 0-4 in previous rematches with the champ, including a decision loss for the
